Evidence of the use of the Liberty Dollar continues to become available. An example: On May 3, 2001, the HUNTINGTON BEACH INDEPENDENT ran an article about the Liberty Dollar. Tariq Malik, the newspaper reporter, interviewed Bernard von NotHaus and three people who at the time were using the Liberty Dollar.

The copyrighted article's title is "New Kind of Money appears in Huntington Beach," subtitle "Three businesses are serving as Redemption Centers for America Liberty Currency." The reporter pertinently wrote that "A new kind of currency has appeared here and could give U.S. Greenbacks a run for their money if it catches on."

The extensive article delved into the working of the Federal Reserve System. It also referred to some 60 different local currencies in use throughout the United States as nothing new to the economy and referred to the Ithaca, New York Hour Currency which sets an hour of labor at $10 and the Mendocino County, California SEED money which stands for "Self-sufficient Ecological Economy Development."

The article concluded with a quotation from Bernard von NotHaus, "The difference between those types and the American Liberty Currency is that we're on a national scale."
